

Madelyn Clem is a junior at Middlebury College, studying Conservation Biology and Math, and one of this year's Field Biology Summer Interns! Being from Texas, Madelyn was drawn to the Green Mountain state through her passion for everything outdoors - hiking, camping, or skiing - as long as she is taking full advantage of her time in Vermont. When not enjoying nature, she can be found reading, playing the banjo, or doing math homework:) She previously served as the Middlebury Area Land Trust's Education and Trails Coordinator, where she focused on community engagement programs, youth outdoor education, and trail maintenance. This summer, she is excited for the amazing opportunity to work alongside OCWICD to help control mosquito nuisances, learn more about laboratory and field methodologies, and engage with the Otter Creek Watershed community!
